

behaviour, meaning the females came on heat from time to time and then the males had to perform their duty. As it is still happening with the chimpanzees. But when we changed more and more from apes to humans we had to turn our hand to hunting in order to stay alive on the savannah and our feeding habits became like all other predators, we had to share the meat the hunters managed to obtain. Apes don't share food, at times they even hide it from another. However, as predators we had one major handicap compared to the big cats and hunting dogs, we had very slow maturing offspring. As we turned into women and men, the men had to do the hunting because the women were busy with children. A lioness probably hunts more than the lion but with us that was not possible, the women could provide what plant food was edible, not much when you have no fire but depended on the men to bring meat back. How to make sure that hubby comes back with the grub?

Women must have thought long and hard, modified their hormonal system and came up with a plain and ingenious system, Permanent Sex! Sexual fun every 6 months could not guarantee a faithful return every day of the meat provider but sex when you felt like it was the enticement the ladies considered full proof. I think by this stage in our evolution not much apelike was left in our makeup, the grasping baby hand maybe.

Robert Ardrey in his 'The Hunting Hypothesis' has, to my mind, written the best description of the metamorphose of periodical sex to permanent sex. Page 73, hilarious!

Anyway, this female invention of modifying our sex life did the trick, we did not become extinct because of lack of parental care although we don't know for how many millions of years permanent sex has functioned. As in evolution nothing seems to be able to go backwards it looks like we are firmly stuck with the ladies' invention but I wonder if, by a miracle, we could go back to periodical sex, human relations might not improve. Since the advent of television there has been a great increase in sexual crimes, rape, and paedophilia are the order of the day, even holy 'fathers' of the church give it a good go. The combined pests, television and publicity have taken over the mind forming process of a very large part of humanity and never has the female body, ever more beautiful, been shown in such naked detail in order to sell fridges, cars, anything at all. Whereas the ladies since their permanent sex invention managed to control their sexual inclination that was not the case for their male partners. They did not become sexual gentlemen, as sophisticated as the ladies, for them, the permanent sex phenomenon had a tendency for their sex drive to become more incontrollable as the periodic periods of abstinence did not have to be observed anymore. What has been called 'bestial rape behaviour' could never have been invented by animals, it became a purely human male characteristic. Sexual satisfaction became, for many, a major goal in life and once humans organized themselves in city states, countries, it did not take long for the notion to develop that political power led to sexual success. The recorded lives of all major political figures since our written history are adequate proof for this statement.

However, our sexual behaviour had always remained rather discreet until the recent telepub invasion where exquisite tits and bums are served up 24/7. The primitive male sexual instincts are not really adapted to handle such a brazen show of sexual invitation and as already mentioned sexual crimes have become the order of the day, often racially inspired. Not surprisingly, these two human inventions, religion and permanent sex have destroyed any
